SUBJECT: PAKISTAN MEDIA REACTION: DECEMBER 02, 2008

Summary: Most Pakistani newspapers highlighted prominently on Tuesday White House spokeswoman Perino's remarks that the "U.S. has no reason to believe that Pakistan's government was involved in last week's terrorist attacks in Mumbai." All newspapers also reported that "Mumbai mounted pressure on Pakistan to act against specific suspects New Delhi wants to be extradited." President Zardai's comments offering "unconditional support to India to investigate Mumbai carnage" also received front-page coverage. Newspapers also front-paged reports that "militants hit NATO supplies and torched 22 trucks in Peshawar." Also highlighted were reports that "ten people were killed when a suicide bomber blew up an explosive-laden truck near a security post in Mingora (NWFP)." The statement by NATO spokesman that "Pakistan must continue action in tribal areas" also received wide coverage.

Most newspapers continued to run editorials on the terrorism incidents in Mumbai and also on the All Parties Security Conference convened by Prime Minister Gilani. The English daily, "Dawn," advised that "India and Pakistan face a common threat and unless the two countries adopt all means to cooperate with one another, the costs for the billion-plus people of South Asia will be high in these times of terror." The second largest Urdu daily, "Nawa-i-Waqt," observed that "convening of national security conference is a welcome step taken by Prime Minister Gilani. A strategy should be adopted to utilize this gifted opportunity for ridding ourselves of the American war on terror." End Summary.

Editorials/Op-eds

"Times Of Terror," an editorial in the Karachi-based center-left independent national English daily "Dawn" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"What cannot be condoned is the behavior of the Indian media. Not only does this put pressure on the Indian government to keep up its accusations and resist moves for a cooperative stance, it also damages people-to-people ties.... India and Pakistan face a common threat - Pakistan more so than India - and unless the two countries adopt all means to cooperate with one another, the costs for the billion-plus people of South Asia will be high in these times of terror."

"National Security Conference: Don't Waste Gifted Opportunity," an editorial in the second-largest, center-right nationalist Urdu daily "Nawa-i-Waqt" (cir. 125,000) (12/02)

"Convening of national security conference is a welcome step taken by Prime Minister Gilani.... America and Europe have been told that Pakistan army deployed at western border could be withdrawn, whereas there is a willing for a dialogue with Baitullah Mehsud and Maulana Fazal Ullah.... A strategy should be adopted to utilize gifted opportunity for ridding ourselves of the American war [on terror]."

"A Joint Policy On National Security," an editorial in the leading mass circulation centrist Urdu daily "Jang" (cir. 300,000) (12/02)

"Merely convening a National Security Conference is not enough, but an all-inclusive policy should be devised that upholds Pakistan's national interests, and sends a unanimous message to all that we as a nation are one to confront any internal or external threat against Pakistan."

"Putting Heads Together," an editorial in the centrist national English daily "The News" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"Amidst signs that India is ready to maximize the pressure on Pakistan following the Mumbai terrorist drama.... But we must also keep in mind more such problems will arise until we persuade the world that we are determined to drive terrorists out and will do all we can to ensure there is no ambiguity in this."

"After Mumbai, Karachi," an editorial in the Lahore-based liberal English language daily "Daily Times" (cir. 10,000) (12/02)

"Those who are encouraging a 'united stand against India' campaign in the media should look carefully into the nature of trouble inside Pakistan. It is not wise to trust a statement - concocted or real - from Waziristan that the loyal tribesmen will stand side by side with the Pakistan army if India brings its troops to the border as it did in 2001.... One should remind the war enthusiasts that every time the tribesmen have been used in war against India it hasn't really redounded to Pakistan's advantage."

"Correct Your Tone, Or We Will Set You Right," an editorial in the center-right Urdu daily "Pakistan" (cir. 10,000) (12/02)

"The civil war in Pakistani tribal areas is painful for all Pakistanis. However, powers nurturing aggression against Pakistan should know that this infighting erupted on difference of opinion on a foreign policy issue. As far as love and loyalty to Pakistan is concerned no one is inferior to other. If war is imposed on then the entire nation including tribals will fight the enemy."

"FATA, Mumbai And Karachi: Where Are Circumstance Leading To?," an editorial note in the Karachi-based, pro Taliban Jihadi Urdu daily "Islam" (cir. 15,000) (12/02)

"This is high time for the government of Pakistan to end hostilities with all militants in tribal areas, and renounce the U.S.-led war on terror. This act will not only quench flames in Pakistan's tribal and border areas, but this move will also dissuade India from any military venture."

"Taliban's Offer For National Defense," an editorial note in the Peshawar-based Urdu-language daily "Mashriq" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"The Taliban's assurance to lend a hand to the government of Pakistan to deal with any possible Indian aggression must be welcomed. It demonstrates that Taliban aren't behind the ongoing turmoil in FATA but in fact those elements who crave to strike at the foundations of our homeland are creating problems for the government. Apart from the present showdown with India, now question is that if Taliban are so patriotic and loyal, why they don't settle their differences with the government in a more civilized way of dialogue. Moreover, the GoP should also not push these compatriot Taliban to the wall, as any settlement between the two will leave no scope for aliens to hang about in the tribal areas to any further extent."

"High Time To Bring Peace With Militants," an editorial in the Islamabad-based rightist English daily "Pakistan Observer" (cir. 5,000) (12/02)

"The militants are proved beyond any doubt that they have strong attachment with Pakistan despite bombing and strikes by our own forces.... Tribals are known for their fearless fighting spirit and their offer at this critical juncture means much for the country. We would, therefore, urge the leadership of the country not to waste more time and ... to concentrate on the eastern border."

"Stoking The Fires," an op-ed by Rasul Bakhsh Rais in the Lahore-based liberal English language daily "Daily Times" (cir. 10,000) (12/02)

"Unfortunately, Indian leaders followed the tone set by the media without giving much thought to the implications of their statements.... The war on terror requires international cooperation, more meaningful and institutionalized than has been forthcoming. An even bigger challenge is for India and Pakistan to cooperate with each other in fighting terrorism. It is not going to be easy given the present climate of distrust."

"New Terrorists In An Old Context," an op-ed by Mosharraf Zaidi in the centrist national English daily "The News" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"Forget the accusations of Pakistani involvement. First, they are about as unique and unexpected as the presence of water during rain. Second, despite the potential plausibility of the accusations, there is an increasing stack of evidence that from New Delhi to Assam to Calcutta, India does have a domestic terrorism problem. Third, there is little argument against the fact that whatever involvement there might be, it is a product of non-state actors, not the Pakistani state."

"A Few Days In Mumbai," an op-ed by Kamila Hyat in the centrist national English daily "The News" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"New Delhi's pointless finger-pointing towards Pakistan, in the absence of solid evidence, seems only to be a continuation of its ostrich-like refusal to face up to immense problems in its own midst. The panic-stricken allegations, including the quite ludicrous charge that the militants may have arrived at Mumbai's shores aboard a boat from Karachi, expose, most of all, major security lapses."

The resignation of India's interior minister underscores this point. The issues of flawed security and intelligence failures will remain a key issue in India."

"Carnage In Mumbai: Huge Trust Deficit," an op-ed by Zaheer Bhatti in the center-right national English daily "The Nation" (cir. 20,000) (12/02)

"Worst still, the smugness of the Indians could easily sabotage and badly hurt American interests, as Pakistan which had so far been a frontline 'ally' against its sinister war thrust upon it much against the wishes of its people, could per force withdraw its troops from its Western borders to face up to the new threat.... There was a hidden hand, which had schematically invented and exported terrorism in the shape of its self-created monster of Al Qaeda, and labeled it as Muslim insurgency."

"Far Away From Peace," an op-ed by Dr. Tariq Rahman in the Karachi-based center-left independent national English daily "Dawn" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"The knee-jerk reaction to blame Pakistan - the state of Pakistan - must stop. It is counterproductive since it prevents the Pakistani government from trying to help India.... The blunder of Pakistan in joining America's proxy war in Afghanistan in the 1980s is the fault of Pakistani decision-makers of that period as it is of American decision-makers. Now both have the albatross of Al Qaeda and the Taliban around their necks. Pakistan should never have used these religious fighters in Kashmir as it is alleged. That too is a whirlwind we are reaping."

"Dealing With The Militants," an op-ed by Mahmood Shah in the Karachi-based center-left independent national English daily "Dawn" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"Pakistan is caught in the eye of the storm in the so-called war on terror between the U.S. and its allies on one side and Al Qaeda and the Taliban on the other.... Many think tanks even in the U.S. feel that this so-called war on terror is more of a ploy and the real intentions lie somewhere else.... The operations by the local Taliban in Pakistan need finances and meticulous planning. Ignorance can be a blessing but not always. The U.S. drone attacks in Pakistan are tantamount to weakening the state in the face of the open onslaught by Al Qaeda and its surrogates.... This is the time for a major rethink regarding our threat hypothesisation and strategic orientation to deal with the complex situation on our western borders."

"Targeting The ISI," an op-ed by Anjum Niaz in the centrist national English daily "The News" (cir. 55,000) (12/02)

"With the Americans, Indians, Israelis and God knows who else wanting to down the ISI, Zardari's last resort and ours too, is the army and its intelligence agency. The impolitic Zardari-Gilani leadership should stop showing off to the world that they and not the establishment control Pakistan. Their false bravura and reckless statements can spell disaster."
